Beauty and the Beast

By AJ Jacobs

NARRATOR: (Pg 103-110) Once upon a time there was a magnificent golden castle on a silver cloud high up in the sky, which has nothing to do with anything because our story is about an old woodchopper who lived in a shack, but that's a good way to start a fairy tale.

INTRODUCTION

Long before Politically Correct Bedtime Stories arrived in bookstores, Americans were getting their giggles from Fractured Fairy Tales, those delightfully twisted parables brought to us between the cliffhanger adventures of our favorite cartoon heroes, Rocky & Bullwinkle.

ROCKY: And now...*
BULLWINKLE: Hey Rocky! Watch me pull a rabbit out of my hat!
ROCKY: But that trick never works!
BULLWINKLE: This time for sure! Presto! (something goes terribly wrong—be creative) Well, I'm getting close.
ROCKY: And now it's time for another special feature!

A nostalgic retro adventure re-imagined by AJ Jacobs in his collection of Fractured Fairy Tales. -- Beauty and the Beast

NARRATOR: The old man was very happy, but he had a daughter who was very unhappy because . . . well, she was rather plain. Actually, she was really plain. In fact, she had a face like five miles of bad road. Anyway, it was time for her to marry, but because she was so fat and ugly, none of the young men of the kingdom ever came to ask for her hand, or any other part of her body, for that matter. Then one day, the old man decided to cheer her up.

OLD MAN: Child, it is your birthday and I've brought you something to keep you from being so lonely.

DAUGHTER: (wide-eyed) A man?

OLD MAN: Nope. A mule.

NARRATOR: He pointed to a brown, furry, four-legged, grunting beast. Well, a mule wasn't exactly the kind of companion she had in mind, but at least it was somebody to talk to.

FOR EDUCATIONAL USE ONLY

DAUGHTER: Hi there, silly beast, I wonder if you were once a handsome prince changed into a mule by a wicked witch. If so, I could break the spell with a kiss. (kisses mule)

NARRATOR: She smacked the mule right on its lips. It was no use. The mule was a mule and had always been a mule.

The next day the old man instructed his daughter to take a bundle of sticks to the village.

DAUGHTER: A bundle of sticks? What for?

OLD MAN: How should I know. But somebody is always carrying a bundle of sticks around in fairy tales. You know that.

NARRATOR: So, the young girl took the bundle of sticks and decided to ride her trusty mule into the village. But something very strange happened. Unknown to her, the moment she climbed onto the mule's back POOF she turned into a beautiful maiden. You know the type: blond hair, blue eyes, a figure like she spends her days doing Jazzercise.

Anyway, when she reached the village, (insert whistles and catcalls) she could hardly believe her eyes, for all the young men, instead of laughing and throwing mud at her, bowed, tipped their hats, and made catcalls. She was still trying to figure it out when a handsome young prince rode up to her on a snow-white horse.

PRINCE: Ah, fair ladyl You are truly the most lovely beauty in the land.

DAUGHTER: (batting her eyes) Why, my young prince, are you nuts or sumpthin'?

PRINCE: With your permission, I should like to call upon you tonight. How about when the clock strikes the hour of eightish?

NARRATOR: Flushed with excitement, the girl raced home; but when she arrived and stepped off her mule, POOF she immediately returned to her fat little ugly self. That night, promptly at eightish o'clock, the prince, sitting astride his white charger, knocked on the door.

PRINCE: (prepares himself and knocks regally)

DAUGHTER: (opens door and smiles)

NARRATOR: A crooked-toothed smile -- one that made chopped yak liver seem appealing –

DAUGHTER: Hellooooo!

FOR EDUCATIONAL USE ONLY

PRINCE: (with a hard to conceal facial reaction) Um . . .

NARRATOR: Said the prince, who at that moment was desiring a bit of Pepto-Bismol, or the medieval equivalent.

PRINCE: Is your sister at home?

DAUGHTER: I don't have a sister.

PRINCE: Your aunt then.

DAUGHTER: I don't have an aunt.

PRINCE: (growing more frantic) Your cousin? Your best friend? Your babysitter?

DAUGHTER: What are you talking about? I live here alone with my father.

PRINCE: (makes a break for it)

NARRATOR: Figuring he had found the wrong house, the prince galloped quickly off on his white steed. The poor girl was left standing at the door, brokenhearted and trying to understand what had gone wrong.

The following day, her father again asked her to go into the village. This time to pick up a bundle of sticks.

OLD MAN: (patting her kindly on her head) It'll take your mind off your ugliness.

NARRATOR: No sooner had the girl climbed on the mule's back than POOF once again she changed into a beautiful maiden.

On the way to the village, she chanced to pass a clear, still pool of water. Looking into it, she saw her reflection and was shocked to see she was now very beautiful. She jumped off her mule for a close look and POOF instantly she changed back into her former ugly self. And then, she suddenly realized what had happened.

DAUGHTER: I get it now!

NARRATOR: She said out loud to no one in particular, as people in fairy tales sometimes do.

DAUGHTER: This is a magic mule. As long as I sit on this beast, I'm a beauty!

NARRATOR: The girl jumped back onto the mule, and POOF beautiful again. And the beauty and the beast dashed to find the prince. When he saw her coming, he rode up to her on his gallant steed.

FOR EDUCATIONAL USE ONLY

PRINCE: Ah, lovely beauty, I have found you again. Please say you will be mine so that we may be married.

DAUGHTER: Yes, but on one condition: That I remain on my mule at all times.

NARRATOR: Of course, this seemed like a strange request, but the prince agreed.

PRINCE: So be it, my love. And so that we start off on the right foot -- or on the right hoof -- I shall stay on my horse as long as you stay on your mule.

NARRATOR: And thus they were married by a priest, who delivered the sermon on a donkey. As the years went by, the young girl was very happy, although the poor mule did get a bit of a backache. And true to his word, the prince also stayed on his horse. And as any good husband would, he took her dancing every Saturday night at the palace, where they were the most striking couple on the dance floor. Or actually, the most striking quadruple on the dance floor.

One day, as the girl rode in the garden WOOSH the wind blew off her bonnet. Not stopping to think, she hopped off her mule to get the hat and POOF she immediately turned into an ugly, disgusting hag again.

DAUGHTER: (adjusting her hat she transfroms from beauty to hag)

NARRATOR: Realizing her mistake, she scrambled to get back in the saddle again. But it was too late, for just then the prince rode up.

PRINCE: Pardon me, old hag. Have you seen my wife? Wait a minute, this is her mule!

DAUGHTER: (blushing and gulping) Yes. And I am your wife.

NARRATOR: She began to sadly confess the whole story to her husband, but instead of being angry . . .

PRINCE: (laughing and clapping for joy) Ha, ha, ha, ha. Yahoo! Yippee!

DAUGHTER: I don't get it. Are you happy to find out that I'm really ugly?

PRINCE: No! I'm happy to know that I can finally get off this blasted horse. You see, I'm only a handsome prince when I stay on him.

FOR EDUCATIONAL USE ONLY

NARRATOR: And with that, the prince hopped off his horse and POOF he changed into one of the ugliest men ever to walk the earth. He was fat and short and bald and full of warts. His face looked like ten miles of bad road.

DAUGHTER: (gleefully) Ugh! You're uglier than me!

PRINCE: (they hug) We were meant for each other! Just think-no more saddle sores!

NARRATOR: And so, the ugly man and the ugly girl were able to live happily ever after.

SOURCE INFORMATION

Author: AJ Jacobs
Book: Fractured Fairy Tales, Pgs 103-110
ISBN: 978-0553373738
Publisher: Bantam Books
Date (Month/Year): Jan 1999

AWARDS

2005 National Qualifier
2006 National Qualifier
2010 National Qualifier
KS State Qualifier

Video of this sequence from the Original Rocky and Bullwinkle Show can be found here*
https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=kx3sOqW5zj4

FOR EDUCATIONAL USE ONLY