Nigger: An Autobiography

By Dick Gregory

Page 209

DICK: This is a revolution. It started long before I came into it, and I may die before it's over, but we'll bust this thing and cut out this cancer. America will be as strong and beautiful as it should be, for black folks and white folks. We'll all be free then, free from a system that makes a man less than a man, that teaches hate and fear and ignorance.

You didn't die a slave for nothing, Momma. You brought us up. You and all those Negro mothers who gave their kids the strength to go on, to take that thimble to the well while the whites were taking buckets. Those of us who weren't destroyed got stronger, got calluses on our souls. And now we're ready to change a system, a system where a white man can destroy a black man with a single word. Nigger.

When we're through, Momma, there won't be any niggers any more.

INTRODUCTION

Richard Claxton Gregory was born on Columbus Day, 1932. A welfare case. You've seen him on every street corner in America. You knew he had rhythm by the way he snapped his cloth while he shined your shoes. Happy little black boy, the way he grinned and picked your quarter out of the air. Then he ran off and bought himself a Twinkie Cupcake, a bottle of Pepsi-Cola, and a pocketful of caramels. You didn't know that was his dinner. And you never followed him home. . . .

Nigger: An Autobiography by Dick Gregory

FOR EDUCATIONAL USE ONLY

Page 25 - 32

DICK: Like a lot of Negro kids, we never would have made it without our Momma. When there was no socks to go with the shoes, no hope to go with tomorrow, she'd smile and say: "We ain't poor, we're just broke." Poor is a state of mind you never grow out of, but being broke is just a temporary condition. She always had a big smile, even when her legs and feet swelled from high blood pressure and she collapsed across the table with sugar diabetes. You have to smile twenty-four hours a day, Momma would say. If you walk through life showing the aggravation you've gone through, people will feel sorry for you, and they'll never respect you. She taught us that man has two ways out in life – laughing or crying. There's more hope in laughing. So you laugh, so you smile.

(PG 28) I wonder how she kept from teaching us hate when the social worker came around. [She] would poke around the house, wrinkling her nose at the coal dust on the chilly linoleum floor, shaking her head at the bugs crawling over the dirty dishes in the sink. [Mama] would follow that nasty woman around those drafty three rooms, keeping her fingers crossed that the telephone hidden in the closet wouldn't ring. Welfare cases weren't supposed to have telephones. (Page 23) When you have a good mother and no father . . . God kind of sits in.

(PG 29) I never learned hate at home, or shame. I had to go to school for that. I was about seven years old when I got my first big lesson. I was in love with a little girl named Helene Tucker, a light-complexioned little girl with pigtails and nice manners. She was always clean and she was smart in school. I think I went to school then mostly to look at her. I brushed my hair and even got me a little old handkerchief. It was a lady's handkerchief, but I didn't want Helene to see me wipe my nose on my hand. The pipes were frozen again, there was no water in the house, but I washed my socks and shirt every night. I'd get a pot, and go over to Mister Ben's grocery store, and stick my pot down into his soda machine. Scoop out some chopped ice. By evening, the ice melted to water for washing. I got sick a lot that winter because the fire would go out at night before the clothes were dry. In the morning I'd put them on, wet or dry, because they were the only clothes I had.

FOR EDUCATIONAL USE ONLY

Everybody's got a Helene Tucker, a symbol of everything you want. I loved her for her goodness, her cleanness, her popularity. She'd walk down my street and my brothers and sisters would yell, "Here comes Helene," and I'd rub my tennis sneakers on the back of my pants and wish my hair wasn't so nappy and the white folks' shirt fit me better. I'd run out on the street. If I knew my place and didn't come too close she'd wink at me and say hello. That was a good feeling. Sometimes I'd follow her all the way home, and shovel the snow off her walk and try to make friends with her Momma and her aunts. I'd drop money on her stoop late at night on my way back from shining shoes in the taverns. And she had a Daddy, and he had a good job. He was a paperhanger.

I guess I would have gotten over Helene by summertime, but something happened in that classroom that made her face hang in front of me for the next twenty-two years. When I played the drums in high school it was for Helene, and when I broke track records in college it was for Helene and when I started standing behind microphones and hear applause I wished Helene could hear it, too. It wasn't until I was twenty-nine years old and married and making money that I finally got her out of my system. Helene was sitting in that classroom when I learned to be ashamed of myself.

FOR EDUCATIONAL USE ONLY

It was on a Thursday. I was sitting in the back of the room, in a seat with a chalk circle drawn around it. The idiot's seat, the troublemaker's seat.

The teacher thought I was stupid. Couldn't spell, couldn't read, couldn't do arithmetic. Just stupid. Teachers were never interested in finding out that you couldn't concentrate because you were so hungry, because you hadn't had any breakfast. All you could think about was noontime, would it ever come? Maybe you could sneak into the cloakroom and steal a bite of some kid's lunch out of a coat pocket. A bite of something. Paste. You can't really make a meal of paste, or put it on bread for a sandwich, but sometimes I'd scoop a few spoonfuls out of the paste jar in the back of the room. Pregnant people get strange tastes. I was pregnant with poverty. Pregnant with dirt and pregnant with smells that made people turn away, pregnant with cold and pregnant with shoes that were never bought for me, pregnant with five other people in my bed and no Daddy in the next room, and pregnant with hunger. Paste doesn't taste too bad when you're hungry.

The teacher thought I was a troublemaker. All she saw from the front of the room was a little black boy who squirmed in his idiot's seat and made noises and poked the kids around him. I guess she couldn't see a kid you made noises because he wanted someone to know he was there.

It was on a Thursday, the day before the Nero payday. The eagle always flew on Friday. The teacher was asking each student how much his father would give to the Community Chest. On Friday night, each kid would get the money from his father, and on Monday he would bring it to the school. I decided I was going to buy me a Daddy right then. I had money in my pocket from shining shoes and selling papers, and whatever Helene Tucker pledged for her Daddy, I was going to top it. And I'd hand the money right int. I wasn't going to wait until Monday to buy me a Daddy.

FOR EDUCATIONAL USE ONLY

I was shaking, scared to death. The teacher opened her book and started calling out names alphabetically.

TEACHER: Helene Tucker?

HELENE: My Daddy said he'd give two dollars and fifty cents.

TEACHER: That's very nice, Helene. Very, very nice indeed.

DICK: That made me feel pretty good. It wouldn't take much to top that. I had almost three dollars in dimes and quarters in my pocket. I stuck my hand in my pocket and held onto the money, waiting for her to call my name. But the teacher closed her book after she called everybody else in the class. I stood up and raised my hand.

TEACHER: What is it now?

DICK: You forgot me. (to the audience) She turned toward the blackboard.

TEACHER: I don't have time to be playing with you, Richard.

DICK: My Daddy said he'd . . .

TEACHER: "Sit down, Richard, you're disturbing the class.

DICK: My Daddy said he'd give . . . fifteen dollars. (to audience) She turned around and looked mad.

TEACHER: We are collecting this money for you and your kind, Richard Gregory. If your Daddy can give fifteen dollars you have no business being on relief.

DICK: I got it right now. I got it right now, my Daddy gave it to me to turn in today, my Daddy said. . .

TEACHER: And furthermore,

DICK: (to audience) she said, looking right at me, her nostrils getting big and her lips getting thin and her eyes opening wide,

FOR EDUCATIONAL USE ONLY

TEACHER: we know you don't have a Daddy.

DICK: Helene Tucker turned around, her eyes full of tears. She felt sorry for me. Then I couldn't see her too well because I was crying, too.

TEACHER: Sit down, Richard.

DICK: And I always thought the teacher kind of liked me. She always picked me to wash the blackboard on Friday, after school. That was a big thrill; it made me feel important. If I didn't wash it, come Monday the school might not function right.

TEACHER: Where are you going, Richard?"

DICK: I walked out of school that day, and for a long time I didn't go back very often. There was shame there.

Now there was shame everywhere. It seemed like the whole world had been inside that classroom, everyone had heard what the teacher had said, everyone had turned around and felt sorry for me. There was shame in going to the Worthy Boys Annual Christmas Dinner for you and your kind, because everybody knew what a worthy boy was. Why couldn't they just call it the Boys Annual Dinner, why'd they have to give it a name? There was shame in wearing the brown and orange and white plaid mackinaw the welfare gave to three thousand boys. Why'd it have to be the same for everybody so when you walked down the street the people could see you were on relief? It was a nice warm mackinaw and it had a hood, and my Momma beat me and called me a little rat when she found out I stuffed it in the bottom of a pail full of garbage way over on Cottage Street. There was shame in running over to Mister Ben's at the end of the day and asking for his rotten peaches, there was shame in asking Mrs. Simmons for a spoonful of sugar, there was shame in running out to meet the relief truck. I hated that truck, full of food for you and your kind. I ran into the house and hid when it came. And then I started to sneak through alleys, to take the long way home so the people going into

FOR EDUCATIONAL USE ONLY

White's Eat Shop wouldn't see me. Yeah, the whole world heard the teacher that day . . . . we all know you don't have a Daddy.

It lasted for a while, this kind of numbness. I spent a lot of time feeling sorry for myself. And then one day I met this wino in a restaurant. I'd been out hustling all day, shining shoes, selling newspapers, and I had goo-gobs of money in my pocket. Bought me a bowl of chili for fifteen cents, and a cheeseburger for fifteen cents, and a Pepsi for five cents, and a piece of chocolate cake for ten cents. That was a good meal. I was eating when this old wino came in. I love winos because they never hurt anyone but themselves.

The old wino sat down at the counter and ordered twenty-six cents worth of food. He ate it like he really enjoyed it. When the owner, Mister Williams, asked him to pay the check, the old wino didn't lie or go through his pocket like he suddenly found a hole.

WINO: Don't have no money.

MR. WILLIAMS: Why in hell you come in here and eat my food if you don't have no money? That food cost me money.

DICK: Mister Williams jumped over the counter and knocked the wino off his stool and beat him over the head with a pop bottle. Then he stepped back and watched the wino bleed. Then he kicked him. And he kicked him again.

I looked at the wino with blood all over his face and I went over. (to Mr. Williams) Leave him alone, Mr. Mister Williams. I'll pay the twenty-six cents.

FOR EDUCATIONAL USE ONLY

(to audience) The wino got up, slowly, pulling himself up to the stool, then up to the counter, holding on for a minute until his legs stopped shaking so bad. He looked at me with pure hate.

WINO: Keep your twenty-six cents. You don't have to pay, not now. I just finished paying for it.

DICK: He started to walk out, and as he passed me, he reached down and touched my shoulder.

WINO: Thanks, sonny, but it's too late now. Why didn't you pay it before?

DICK: I was pretty sick about that. I waited too long to help another man. (PG 177) And it dawned on me that anytime you help a Negro in America, even the Negroes will question your intentions. I was just beginning to realize what a long hard row it would be.

(PG 209) Those of us who weren't destroyed got stronger, got calluses on our souls. And now we're ready to change a system. (PG 201) Every white man in America knows we are Negroes, and some of them know us by our names. So when he calls us a nigger, he's calling us something we are not, something that exists only in his mind. So if nigger exists only in his mind, who's the nigger? (PG 209) When we're through, Momma, there won't be any niggers any more.

FOR EDUCATIONAL USE ONLY

SOURCE INFORMATION

Author: Dick Gregory
ISBN: 978-0671735609
Publisher: Simon and Schuster Adult Publishing
Date (Month/Year): May 1976

AWARD HISTORY

2002 National Qualifier
2008 National Qualifier
2009 National Qualifier
2015 National Qualifier
IL State Finalist

FOR EDUCATIONAL USE ONLY