Channel Changers

By Wayne Rice and Mike Yaconelli

NOTE: This cutting asks each student to portray multiple characters, which is permissible for Nationals and SOME states. It may not meet the rules requirement for DUO in your state! Be sure to check your STATE rules before performing at local tournaments.

The following three scripts all follow the same format. The idea is to demonstrate what might happen if you flipped back and forth between several different programs or channels on your radio or television set. Each "click" in the script is a channel change and should be presented by the actors in an alternating sequence without regard to the character listed. Use your own creativity, add your own lines, and have fun with these.

INTRODUCTION

ACTOR 1: Let's admit it . . . We're always searching for something better: Something nicer, faster, newer, shinier, bigger. Something more. Something else.

ACTOR 2: The remote control made this search easier than ever: you can navigate a thousand channels without leaving your couch, flipping endlessly through channel after channel after channel until you find something better.

ACTOR 1: But television isn't the only place in which we constantly search for something better: we flip through every aspect of our lives—food, relationships, radio stations, work—all the while looking for anything other than what's in front of us.

ACTOR 2: The problem is, in a world of unlimited choices, there actually is always something better somewhere.
